The “Wooden Bike Guy” is back in business, after quite a ride

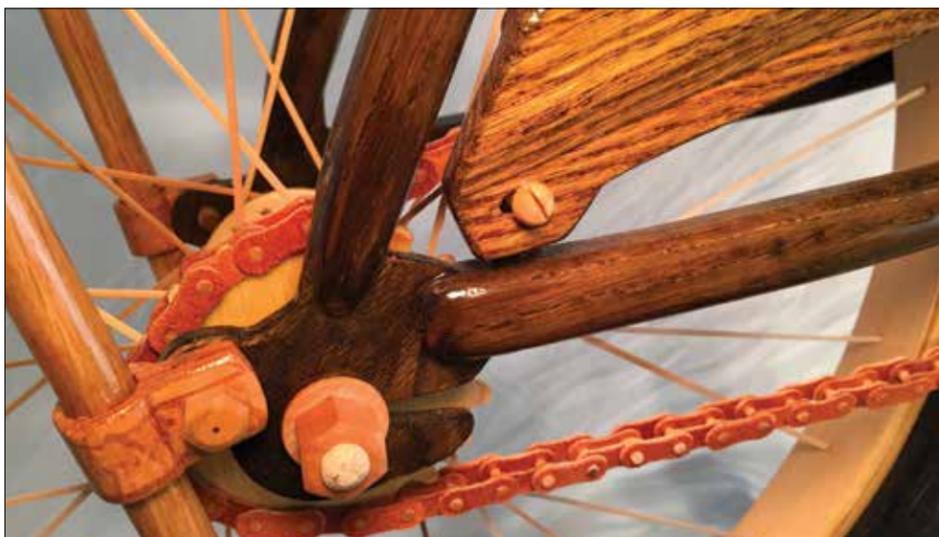

By Greta Bolger

Current Contributor

Kurt Swanson and his fine woodworking business, Always August Designs, are now humming along nicely on the north shore of Crystal Lake. But it has been quite a ride for the former tool-and-die professional.

Within the span of three years, Swanson went from working a 9-to-5 Grand Rapids office job, where he used a computer to draw thin metal parts that would be used in cars and microwaves, to starting his own lakeside furniture business.

“I was working eight- and ten-hour days on a computer, being pulled in 20 different directions,” Swanson says. “Every job was a hot job, a rush job, as in, ‘We need it yesterday.’ There just wasn’t any reward or satisfaction at the end of the day—I was doing the job because it needed to be done, not because I enjoyed it.”

Swanson knew that there had to be more out there for him. He wanted to find a career that spoke to his soul. And on happenstance, he found just that, after dabbling in woodworking for an art competition. Now Swanson is his own boss, he sets his own hours, and he can walk about 50 paces from his kitchen to his shop.

Sure, this all may sound like a luxurious change, but there was a time when Swanson thought to himself, “What was I thinking?”

From Dabbling to Full-Time

Swanson, age 52, has always enjoyed woodworking as a hobby, continually striving to create bigger and more challenging proj-

Baby’s Breath: One Person’s Bouquet, Another’s Nemesis

Removing invasive species from Elberta Beach

By Emily Cook

Current Contributor

Baby’s breath—a plant commonly included in flower shop bouquets, boutonnières, and corsages—is more than just a companion for roses and carnations. It is an invasive plant that thrives on the dunes and beaches that dot our Northern Michigan landscape.

A single baby’s breath plant can produce 14,000 seeds each year. Additionally, baby’s breath is often included in wildflower seed mixes, inadvertently introducing the plant to yards and surrounding natural areas. The negative impacts of baby’s breath can be seen in our community, as it spreads quickly and overtakes dunescapes, threatening habitat for native species, such as the federally threatened pitcher’s thistle and endangered piping plover bird.

Fortunately, local organizations and volunteers will spend time this spring and summer treating and removing baby’s breath from Elberta Beach, where it has an established presence. Organized by the Northwest Michigan Invasive Species Network (ISN) and the Grand Traverse Regional Land Conservancy, volunteers will remove baby’s breath on the beach, one of the last unmanaged sections of shoreline between Arcadia Dunes Nature Preserve and the Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore.

“Baby’s breath can be controlled through digging and piling, to prevent seed dispersion,” says Fields Ratliff, ISN’s habitat management specialist. “Our volunteers are out on

Growing Native in Benzie County

Our local gardening and native plant network

By Monica Schultz

Current Contributor

The day native plants arrived was the day my garden buzzed to life. Insects had found the butterfly weed, prairie clover, lupine, maidenhair fern, and other assorted tagged sprouts and seedlings that stood potted, ready to be planted. Standing on our hillside property, within an invisible sound field of countless pollinators, I heard their wings hum and actually felt their vibrations. Our hillside garden had never been so alive.

I now understand why it is easy to get hooked on gardening with native plants.

Residents and visitors alike know that conservation and beauty run deep in Benzie County. Efforts by the Grand Traverse Regional Land Conservancy have saved—and continue to save—large tracts of land, such as Arcadia Dunes (along Lake Michigan) and Railroad Point (adjacent to Crystal Lake). Even national organizations such as The Nature Conservancy have a presence here (think Zetterberg Preserve, near Point Betsie Lighthouse).

But just as important are a multitude of smaller, less visible efforts to save and reclaim wildlife habitat on patches of land that consist of fractions of an acre. These are the native plant gardens—patchworks of vital habitat—scattered amongst our homes, cottages, and cabins.

Creating A Network

Over the past 15 years, a dedicated group of individuals have created a regional network of native plant education and restoration efforts that now crosses counties and forms a bridge between private and public entities. This network allows owners of small plots of Cory Bissell is notorious around town. Always dressed dapper, with a shock of blond hair and Buddy Holly frames, he is most widely known as the owner of Kilwin's in Frankfort. However, even if you are not a "fudgie" or a candy connoisseur, it is likely that you recognize his mug from any number of the other organizations and activities that dot his resume—Bissell is a very busy young man with deep Benzie County roots.

Bissell graduated from Frankfort High School in 2005, but his family line goes back 10 generations, to Elberta and Frankfort's beginnings—French Canadian-born John Greenwood and his wife, Caroline (Robar), of Ludington, settled in what is now Elberta in June 1855. They made a living by hunting, fishing, trapping, and farming, and they contributed greatly to the development of Gilmore Township, according to The Elberta Alert. For instance, the Greenwoods' first home, commonly referred to as the Cedar Log House, was used as an informal school from 1855 to 1860, when the Greenwoods moved their farm just south of Elberta, and their first residence officially became the Cedar Log School, the first schoolhouse in Benzie County. Additionally, John Greenwood was a blacksmith and operated shops in both Frankfort and Elberta, including a shop at the Cedar Log House that was Benzie County's first place of business. He also was the first to carry the mail from Manistee to Frankfort, when the trail was less than developed. But arguably the most Founding Fatherly fact in this allegory is John Greenwood's hand in the naming of this area: according to Blacklock's History of Elberta, Joseph Robar and Frank Martin were others who moved to this area in 1855, with Martin living temporarily at the trapping shelter of Joseph Oliver, credited as Elberta's first (white) settler. The high winds off Lake Michigan would pile snow and sand, so Robar and Greenwood helped Frank Martin to erect a wall of logs to protect his home—they called the place Frank's Fort, and this is said to have been the inspiration for the name "Frankfort."

Nowadays, Bissell is Frankfort's candy man. After working at Kilwin's since the age of 15, Bissell (now 29) bought the store at 23, just after finishing up at Grand Valley State University in 2010. Meanwhile, his father, Dave, is the water superintendent for the City of Frankfort, and his mother, Amy, is the registrar for Benzie County.

Bissell's love of this place and its people is apparent in his jovial personality but also in his dedication to local organizations and events—something that he likely picked up from Mom and Dad, both civil servants. For instance, Bissell is on the Frankfort Planning & Zoning Commission, he is a member of the Benzie County Community Chorus, he often participates in productions by the Benzie County Players, and his store sponsors numerous local events from the Betsie Bay Frozen 5k to the local youth soccer programs. And because he cannot sit still for very long, in the winter, when Kilwin's closes from the New Year through early April, he is a server at The Roadhouse Mexican Bar & Grill in Benzonia. Not to mention that Bissell also performs wedding ceremonies in the summer, his busiest season at the store!

Continuing with our interview series on impactful Benzie County characters, The Betsie Current caught up with Bissell in the last few sleepy Frankfort days, before the busy summer season is set to begin.

THE BETSIE CURRENT: What made you first want to work at Kilwin's, back when you were in high school? What was it like back then?

CORY BISSELL: I knew I liked working around people, and I have always had a huge sweet tooth. Kilwin's had the best tasting ice cream and seemed like a fun spot, where I would fit in.

CURRENT: We know that you studied Physical Therapy in college. That is a pretty far cry from owning your own candy store. So why did you return "home" to Frankfort, after leaving the area?

BISSELL: I was wrapping up my undergrad and trying to decide where I was headed afterward. My plan was to be a free spirit and take a year off to travel/work/see some new places. I came home for the summer to save up some money and was met with an offer to manage and then buy the store, if I could. I enjoyed running things so much that I decided to change paths and give it a go—grad school is always waiting, as a back-up.

CURRENT: What did you miss most about this area while you were away?

BISSELL: The outdoors!! I took for granted how beautiful this area is and what all it has to offer. It blew my mind that people had to travel 30 minutes, pay to park, and hang out on a crowded beach in Grand Haven. It was beautiful, but I missed having it all right out my back door.

CURRENT: What are the biggest challenges and rewards of working and living in Benzie County and in Northern Michigan in general? What is the best or most rewarding part of your job?

BISSELL: With any place, there are the pros and cons. Frankfort has always been home to me, and so I cherish it for all of the memories that I have of growing up here. I also enjoy the different people that find their way here and become part of the culture. It is nice to have friends from many different backgrounds. It was a bit difficult, when I first moved back, to find a good friend group—there are not a lot of people in there 20s and 30s around. Owning Kilwin's has also meant that I don't have the freetime to travel and take weekends to see college friends. It is a bit remote in that sense. The most rewarding part of my job is how happy it makes people. That is something I always strive to do, and I appreciate finding a fulfilling career that allows me to do so every day.

CURRENT: What other things are you involved with? How did you get involved with them, and why are you passionate about these causes?

BISSELL: I—very loosely—consider myself a Renaissance Man. Moreover, I feel the call to do my part, giving time to boards and organizations. I have been involved with the Frankfort Planning Commission and helped to create Frankfort's Downtown Development Authority, which helps to shape Frankfort, as well as protect the charm and character that we all love. I also sing with the Benzie Chorus and put on plays with the Benzie Players. The arts have always been a passion, and I feel privileged to be involved. I have Sue and Jay Gainforth to thank for getting me started, as well as my [maternal] grandparents, Jean and Bill Higman, who would take me to musicals at Interlochen.

CURRENT: How have you seen your work grow and change? How do you hope it will continue to grow? What's next?

BISSELL: Life in the summer is always busy, and our town seems to be booming. I have increased staff every year just to keep up. It is great to see new visitors who are falling in love with the area and new businesses making a go of it here. CURRENT: What are some ways that you and your business give back to the community?

BISSELL: I am a proud supporter of the summer reading program, put on by the Benzie Shores District Library in Frankfort. I also donate gift bags throughout the year to many different charities and events that benefit the schools, community, and nonprofit organizations. I think it's so important to give back to the community that has been—and continues to be—so supportive of me.

CURRENT: Is there a busy season for you or is it pretty constant year-round?

BISSELL: Summer has always been the bread and butter of our year. Like many businesses in our area, that is the time that makes or breaks a year.

With the growing popularity over the past few years, the shoulder seasons have become increasingly busy. I have seen a large bump in business, especially in the fall during color tour and the Frankfort Film Festival. Christmas is my favorite holiday, and it makes my season to get everything decorated and to play Christmas music and prepare gifts for everyone. January through March are quite slow, and so I close the store, to recharge my batteries and prepare for the next season. I fill my time with some travel, and I moonlight over at the Roadhouse [as a server]—it's great for getting me out of the house on snowy days and to see all of the friendly faces.

CURRENT: We would think that owning your own business would be challenging/time-consuming enough, yet you seem to have a lot of things on your plate? How do you balance them?

BISSELL: It definitely is a balancing act and requires a lot of my time. I have always enjoyed being busy and having a project to work on. It does get difficult to make everything work at times, but I have a lot of help from family and flexible friends that work with me. It's definitely a team effort, and I owe so much thanks to my partner, Matthew.

CURRENT: What are your favorite local events and activities? Any favorite dining, recreation, hiking spots?

BISSELL: I try to get out and support as many local events as my schedule allows. I enjoy the local music festivals and farmers' markets the most. It is great to see what talented people live in Northern Michigan, and I love music. The farmers' markets are a great way to get some truly delicious produce and homemade goods, as well as support local, sustainable operations.

CURRENT: What is your favorite item that you sell at Kilwin's?

BISSELL: It changes seasonally, especially when we introduce limited edition confections. Right now it would have to be the Jordan almonds. Sweet and crunchy!

CURRENT: What's your perfect summer day look like in Benzie County? How would you spend it?

BISSELL: The perfect summer day starts out with making a full breakfast at home—something I rarely get to do—then either biking/hiking/kayaking through the afternoon; dinner on the deck of Coho with friends; and heading to a friend's house for a bonfire, preferably with someone with a guitar.

Kilwin's of Frankfort is open Monday-Thursday 12-5 p.m., Friday 12-8 p.m., Saturday 12-6 p.m., and Sunday 12-4 p.m. Call the store at 231-399-0350.

land to play a part in habitat restoration and preservation, too.

Some say local interest and passion for native plants—and their landscape possibilities—began with Suz McLaughlin, a caterer specializing in organic and local foods via her business Still Grinning Kitchens, whom The Betsie Current profiled back in a 2015 Q&A. (Read here: bit.ly/2qGoQLi) McLaughlin, a longtime Frankfort resident, humbly denies this, however.

“I learned a lot from a group of women on Leelanau Peninsula who worked with developers,” McLaughlin says. “The women harvested native plants on properties prior to new construction, then they sold the plants. When I worked for the Benzie Conservation District, I thought native plant sales were a good way to raise money, and so did Mary Pitcher, the Conservation District’s executive director at the time.

“To promote our fundraising and conservation efforts,” McLaughlin continues, “I gave talks about native plants and invited folks who were interested in native species gardening to a local Benzie Audubon meeting. It took off from there.”

Did it ever.

Carolyn Thayer, a landscape designer and owner of Designs in Bloom in Frankfort, was one of the people who showed up to the meetings. Soon, an informal native plant gardening group had formed under the umbrella of the Benzie Conservation District.

“Eventually, we decided we wanted something more formal,” Thayer says, laughing. “We thought of joining a national organization, but—well—there were all these rules. Where’s the fun in that?”

Hence the group formed its own board, and Plant It Wild was born in 2000.

Growing The Network

Plant It Wild is an independent, nonprofit, native plant group, based in Benzie and Manistee counties in Northern Michigan. The mission of Plant It Wild is to foster greater awareness and appreciation of the fragile natural environment of our region. Through direct efforts, Plant It Wild works to preserve, protect, and promote the natural beauty of the area and its plant communities.

Whereas there were few (if any) online resources when McLaughlin got started, Plant It Wild’s website now offers a multitude of links to specialists who assist those who are interested in preserving and restoring habitat. The list includes local native plant nurseries and organizations, such as the Invasive Species Network, Master Gardeners, the Benzie Conservation District, the Grand Traverse Conservation District, and many others.

But back then, the network was less established. Especially when it came to growers.

“We didn’t have a huge inventory of harvested plants,” McLaughlin says. “We needed a native plant nursery to supply us. Mary Pitcher was able to develop a relationship with Prairie Moon Nursery in Minnesota—it was the only nursery that would ship to us! But we both wanted a more local supplier, so I approached Paul and Jody Zemsta of Misty Ridge Green-her encouragement, we started collecting native plant seeds within a 50-mile radius of our greenhouse. Now, we have our own plants that we collect seed off of. Since then, we’ve sold thousands of native plants, and we would’ve never done that if it wasn’t for Suz McLaughlin.”

Several other local nurseries have begun to grow native plants to meet the demand, including Greystone Gardens, outside of Honor, a nursery run by Tom Brodhagen, a third-generation grower.

“My grandparents ran West Winds Greenhouse on M-22,” Brodhagen says. “Their property is now part of Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore. I started working in their greenhouses. I’ve always been outdoorsy. Always loved native plants. Five years ago, I decided to grow natives and offer them to customers. They’re more in demand, as people realize how hardy they are and how valuable to the ecosystem.”

Recently, Four Seasons Nursery out of Traverse City began carrying native trees and shrubs.

“It was a really big deal to have such a large nursery come on board and carry larger native plants in our region,” Thayer says. “They’ve dedicated themselves to growing and selling trees, shrubs, and perennials at landscape sizes.”

Using The Network

Thayer uses several plant suppliers in her landscape design work, and she advocates for the beauty of native plants, as well as ecosystem restoration.

“We know plants are very specialized, and the relationship between native insects and specific plants is specialized, as well,” Thayer says. “Take away one specific plant, and you take away what could be the only food source for a specific pollinator. For example, take away the milkweed family, and we lose the monarchs: no milkweed, no monarchs.”

Where does “local” fit in, then? Various types of milkweed grow throughout the United States, for instance.

“I wouldn’t suggest that people take milkweed from Florida and replant it in Michigan—I get asked that a lot,” Thayer says. “Climate varies throughout the U.S., and different milkweed genotypes bloom at different times and are adapted to different climates. So plant local milkweed; it’s adapted to our climate and our growing season.”

It is easy to catch the native plant landscape “bug.” If it seems overwhelming or if you are uneasy about starting, don’t be. Because of the work of McLaughlin, Pitcher, Zemsta, Brodhagen, Thayer, and others, there are now many resources. (Just look at those listed in the sidebar.)

“You can go as big or as small as you want. Even a small patch helps; don’t underestimate the power of a small patch of native garden,” Thayer advises. “The important thing is to design a garden you’ll enjoy and that—happily—supports the local ecosystem, too. Any garden can be tackled in stages.”

In writing this article, as one interview led to another, I realized that the roots of our local native plant trend are difficult to dig up (pun intended). I mentioned this to McLaughlin.

“But that’s the thing,” she laughs. “They’re not roots, are they? They’re seeds. They float around and spread all over.”

Monica Schultz lives just outside of Frankfort, where she enjoys her garden while spending as little time as possible actually working in it.

ects. When he entered ArtPrize in 2012 with a bike that he had made entirely of different types of wood, he got the nickname “Wooden Bike Guy,” as well as his first exposure to the international competition.

ArtPrize is an open, independently organized art competition that takes place for 19 days each fall in Grand Rapids. The idea came from Grand Rapids entrepreneur Rick DeVos, who wanted to create an art competition that was open to anyone who wanted to submit work and in which the public voted for the winner online. The first ArtPrize took place in 2009 with 150 venues displaying works by 1,262 artists from more than 40 states and a dozen countries, and that first year, ArtPrize awarded the world’s largest monetary art prize.

Now, more than $500,000 in prizes are awarded each year, which includes a $200,000 prize awarded entirely by the public vote and another $200,000 prize awarded by a jury of experts.

ArtPrize’s website states, “Any artist working in any medium from anywhere in the world can participate. Art is exhibited throughout downtown Grand Rapids—museums, bars, public parks, restaurants, theaters, hotels, bridges, laundromats, auto-body shops, vacant storefronts, and office spaces. Artists and venues register for the competition, then find each other through an online connections process in late spring... From the beginning, ArtPrize [has been] a totally new type of city-wide event, intended to disrupt typically highly curated art prizes. And from the beginning, it has provoked discussion, on the streets and online.”

Since ArtPrize is free and open to the public, it attracts more than 500,000 annual visitors who walk the city to check out the art displays at the various venues. Thus, getting a good location can be a big part in securing votes.

“The venue we were at in 2012 wasn’t high traffic, so we didn’t get a lot of visitors, but the venue was really supportive, and we had a great time,” Swanson says. The experience was so enjoyable that Swanson once again entered Art Prize in 2015—this time with an even more challenging project.

“When we were growing up, my brothers and I all had Schwinn Stingray bikes. We loved those bikes. So when I thought about creating another Art Prize entry, the vintage Stingray seemed perfect. But making just one didn’t seem hard enough—so I made three,” Swanson says.

Whereas he had been working on the 2012 bike on and off for two years, the 2015 set of three bikes took a total of 450 hours within one year. The bikes were again constructed of wood and stained so that the wood grain shows through. This time around, Swanson was fortunate enough to land at a high-traffic venue, and his work was voted into the Top 20 by the public. The extra confidence he gained from that recognition convinced Swanson that it was time to devote himself full time to the creative life. He left his 30-year career in the tool-and-die industry and moved to Benzie County, where he and his wife, Sue, had purchased a cottage near Crystal Lake three years earlier.

That is when things got a little more interesting.

Up In Flames

ArtPrize concluded in October 2015, and the couple had moved Up North before the new year. Long before Swanson’s success at ArtPrize, the couple had been trying to figure out how they could make a living up here. Sue had been working in IT for the Catholic Diocese, and she was able to secure a job up here in cyber security.

For those first few months, Sue was the breadwinner, until her husband’s business could get off the ground. Over that winter, Swanson worked for his brother-in-law, Rick was minor this time, and Swanson was able to re-open his business on schedule, and he has been happily creating custom furniture pieces for clients in his new woodworking shop for the past six months.

What The Future Holds

The business name, Always August Designs, is Swanson’s way of communicating his love of summer in Benzie County. His works capture the feel of cottage life and the beautiful days spent outdoors, with furniture that fits perfectly into that lifestyle.

“Always August Designs will specialize in custom, hand-built furniture that is a step up from what you can buy in stores,” Swanson says. “A customer may need a piece that fits into a specific space, or that meets other special requirements. I want to make beautiful, useful pieces in a price range that most people can afford.”

When asked about his business plan, Swanson says that he will stay flexible and respond to the needs of the market.

“There are not a lot of others doing what I’m doing in this area,” he says. “I want to make things I like and see if customers want them.”

He has made mahogany table tops for Stormcloud Brewing Company in downtown Frankfort, and a custom dresser that he made for a local customer has been featured in a recent exhibit at the Oliver Art Center.

Current projects in Swanson’s workshop include mahogany tables, designed to resemble the hull of a Chris Craft boat—these can be personalized with the customer’s boat name. He is also working on a hickory bench and other custom projects. He Horton who owns Frankfort-based Horton Quality Carpentry.

“He was giving me work for the first winter up here,” says Swanson, who was working out of a converted garage at the time. “I also did some tables for Stormcloud [Brewing Company], and had a few other projects via word of mouth. Enough to keep me busy.”

Then in April 2016, just four months after moving to Benzie County, Swanson was eating lunch at home when he heard crackling coming from the garage shop. Upon going to investigate, he saw that the whole building was in flames. There was nothing to do but call the fire department. His shop, his tools, his works-in-progress—all of it was lost, thanks to improperly disposing of some oily rags.

Fortunately, the shop was well insured, and Swanson—with the help of his brother-in-law—was able to rebuild and re-equip a bigger workshop with better tools starting in June. But then, just before the new shop was to re-open last October, a 3,000-pound tree fell on the new metal roof. Luckily, the damage is confident that he can respond to growing demand for his work.

“I’m used to being under the gun,” he says, remembering the demanding 9-to-5 office job. “I’m good at planning ahead and being very organized, so I welcome requests for new projects.”

In between designing and building furniture, Swanson is loving his new life in Benzie. He and his wife take advantage of the year-round recreational options, including biking, skiing, snowboarding, and just enjoying life in general.

“I love this place,” he says. “I love the people here, and I want to do good work for them.”

You can see samples Swanson’s work at the Frankfort Craft Show on Saturday, June 17, along Main Street from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. And by the way, the Stingray bikes are still for sale.

Greta Bolger is president of the board for the Oliver Art Center. Contact Swanson by emailing kurt@alwaysaugustdesigns.com.

the beach for about three hours at a time, which isn't a bad way to spend a morning during the summer in Northern Michigan."

Removing baby's breath during the early summer is ideal, because the plant dries out by late August and can break off at the base, turning it into a tumbleweed that can travel down the shoreline in the wind, dispersing its seed along the way.

The Grand Traverse Regional Land Conservancy has been treating baby's breath at the nearby Arcadia Dunes Nature Preserve since 2004 and recently expanded removal efforts to Elberta Beach in 2016, according to Jon Throop, GTRLC land steward.

"These dune ecosystems host a number of rare and threatened species that rely Grand Traverse, Leelanau, and Manistee counties. Of those Top 20, the priority plants are known as the Focus Four, which includes garlic mustard, Japanese knotweed, oriental bittersweet, and Phragmites. While baby's breath is not listed as a Focus Four priority species, Elberta Beach is a valuable landscape that serves as critical habitat, making this an important project for ISN.

Volunteer events, called work bees, will begin on Thursday, May 25, and continue sporadically until early August—all are welcome to join in this effort from 9 a.m. until noon each day!

on the dynamic nature of dunes for their survival," Throop says. "GTRLC quickly realized that protecting land against development isn't enough to maintain these habitats into the future. We have to safeguard these areas from the ongoing threat of invasive species to truly preserve the health and beauty of our iconic beaches and dunes."

Paula Dreeszen is a volunteer with the Grand Traverse Regional Land Conservancy and frequently helped with last year's baby's breath-removal events.

"I fight invasives, because I love native wildflowers," Dreeszen says. "Removing baby's breath at Elberta Beach is especially important to prevent its spread south into beach and dune areas, rich with natives like hairy puccoon, beach pea, and pitcher's thistle."

Baby's breath is one of ISN's "Top 20 Least-Wanted Invasive Species," a list of invasive plants that are prevalent in the four-county region that ISN serves: Benzie,

As a thank you, anyone who participates in a work bee will receive some ISN swag and discounts to local businesses, including Stormcloud Brewing Company and the Crescent Bakery in Frankfort. Additionally, names will be entered into a drawing that takes place at the end of each event. Prizes include certificates to The Cabbage Shed and FrankZ, native wildflower seed packets, t-shirts, and more.

Emily Cook is ISN's outreach specialist. If you want to participate in a work bee session, there is no need to register beforehand, but any questions can be directed to 231-941-0960 extension 20 or ecook@gtrcd.org. As these work bees will be held outside, volunteers are asked to bring work gloves, water, and sunscreen. Meet at the beach parking lot.
